CHARTFILE

A PATRIOTIC pressing of the new Men At Work 'Down Under' single, in the shape of the band's homeland Australia, will obviously become a prized collector's item. It's the first record to be pressed in that shape and, with the simultaneously released Africa-shaped single from Juluka, brings to 17 the number of non-spherical dummies logged by Chartfile in the last year.

Another rarity, though of standard dimensions, has been created accidentally by EMI. The company's pressing plant has been producing picture discs of Hawkwind's 'Silver Machine' and the Beatles' 'Please Please Me'. Somewhere along the way they managed to get the two confused and it's believed that several hundred copies of 'Silver Machine' have been dispatched to dealers with 'Ask Me Why' — the B-side of 'Please Please Me' replacing the accredited flip 'Seven Years' Even'. Whilst the discs can obviously be returned, they are likely to appreciate value and should therefore be retained for the time being.

Meanwhile, 'Silver Machine' is dominating the charts for the third time in seven years. When originally released it reached number three selling over 0,000,000 copies. In 1978 it reached the comparatively modest number 34 slot but sold 68,000 copies, mostly on vinyl.

OF the many superstar duets revealed in Chartfile (December 25, 1982) the first to reach the top is Cliff Richard and Phil Everly's 'Love Means Nothing To Me'. The fact that it's duets with Kenny Rogers and Diana Easton joining forces to bolster their sagging careers in a version of Seger's 'We've Got Tonight' and — hold the front page — Barbra Streisand has coaxed Michael Jackson to duet with her. Jackson's second duet with Paul McCartney is now unlikely to be released as a single. The track, apparently a surefire chart topper, will certainly appear on McCartney's forthcoming album but rumblings from the USA indicate that the middle class whites, who comprise most of Macca's American following, would not take kindly to Macca again pairing with a black act. It's thought that his much-publicised pairings with Wonder and Jackson have harmed sales of 'Tug Of War' and that to spotlight another black/white duet by releasing it as a single would further diminish McCartney's appeal to these bigots. The whole thing sounds unbelievable, but two separate US sources insist it is so...

EASTON: duet with Rogers

John Lennon's 'Collection' has been dethroned by Ronco's 'Raiders Of The Pop Charts' compilation but not before it reached one million sales in Britain alone. It's the first EMI album to reach seven figures since 'Queen Greatest Hits' did so a year ago.

Laura Branigan's recent US hit 'Gloria' is finally climbing the British charts after lying dormant for some time. Laura's strident, sub-Donna Summer delivery is perfectly suited to the song but its success caused mixed feelings for Italian co-author Umberto Tozzi, who admits he's delighted that the song has finally made it but wishes that it was his own version that was making inroads into the UK and US listings.

Tozzi, long a superstar in his homeland, co-wrote the song in 1979 and his recording was a massive hit worldwide, reaching number one in 13 countries and amassing sales of nearly 30 million. Somehow Britain and America failed to appreciate Tozzi's overbearing Latin charm and the record flopped. A few months later the irrepressible Jonathan King realised the song's potential and penned English lyrics, something Tozzi and his cohorts had never bothered to do. Jonathan then went into the studio and laid down a particularly unattractive version of 'Gloria' which failed to chart.

Some time later American record producers Jack White and Greg Mathieson were looking for songs for Laura Branigan to record and checked around the music publishers. They found 'Gloria', but hated King's lyrics. Mathieson persuaded sometime colleague Trevor Veitch to set some new prose to the tune and a million seller was born. If they'd kept Jonathan's lyrics he'd have earned at least £30,000 from American royalties!

The Cliff Adams Singers seem to have come full circle. Their current hit album is entitled 'Sing Something Simple' — the very same title they gave to their first chart LP all of 23 years ago. Then they were on Pye and the album featured 15 songs. Their latest LP, a double, features no less than 104 songs in medley-form and was recorded especially for TV merchandisers Ronco last year. The very week it entered the chart another of the new entries was BBC's 'On The Air', a compilation of 60 BBC TV and radio themes which included — yes, you guessed it! — the Cliff Adams Singers with a 1973 recording of 'Sing Something Simple'...

● Last week's RM erroneously listed Cherry Red's 'Pillows And Prayers' compilation at number 80 in the LP chart. Splendid though it is, the album was later excluded from the chart as its selling price of 99p makes it ineligible.
