MUSIC WEEK 22 NOVEMBER 1997

THE OFFICIAL UK CHARTS

CHART FOCUS

THE UK'S OFFICIAL CHART SOURCE

Facing a formidable twin-pronged attack on its title next week from The Prodigy's Smack My Bitch Up and the multi-artist recording of Lou Reed's Perfect Day, Aqua's Barbie Girl is comfortably the country's number one single for the fourth straight week. It sold a further 165,000 units last week, and should top 1m domestically by Wednesday, making it the biggest novelty hit in years. It's the longest-reigning number one by a Universal label since Cher's Shoop Shoop Song (It's In His Kiss) spent five weeks at the summit in 1991.

Meanwhile, a single that missed out on number one exactly 22 years ago – it spent three weeks at number two behind Queen's Bohemian Rhapsody – re-enters the chart this week at number six. Reactivated after its inclusion in the movie The Full Monty, Hot Chocolate's You Sexy Thing is the third version of the song to chart in as many months. Clock's recording, which dips 19-22 this week, peaked at number 11, and has sold 120,000 units, while T-Shirt's dance remake surfaced in September, peaking at number 63.

But proving that reactivation is not always a wise thing to do, the Happy Clappers' I Believe lags far behind, at number 28 on its fourth outing in under three years. After failing to chart on its initial release, it was relaunched twice in 1995, first peaking at number 21 and then at number seven. Its current incarnation includes several new mixes.

Rapidly establishing themselves as Britain's third-favourite girl group, behind the Spice Girls and Eternal, All Saints have the distinction of making the week's highest singles chart debut, entering at number three with their second single Never Ever. Their debut single I Know Where It's At debuted and peaked at number four in September. The group has gained more impetus than that slight improvement in chart position indicates – I Know Where It's At sold fewer than 48,000 units in its first week, while Never Ever more than doubled that, clearing 104,000 sales last week.

The second single from David Arnold's James Bond album project Shaken & Stirred is off to a disappointing start. Arnold's collaboration with David McAlmont, Diamonds Are Forever, barely breaks the Top 40 this week, debuting at number 39, while Arnold's pairing with The Propellerheads on a version of On Her Majesty's Secret Service peaked at number seven a few weeks ago to give the album a perfect launch. Oddly enough, despite being one of Shirley Bassey's most famous records, Diamonds Are Forever was never a massive hit for her either, performing only marginally better than the two Davids' recording by peaking at number 38 in 1972.

Sales of the Spice Girls' Spiceworld album are down by more than 50% this week, falling from an opening 192,000 to 91,000, the latter figure exactly matching the market average for number one albums in 1997. Adverse press will certainly have contributed to the record's sharp decline but it still outsold the number two album – The Verve's Urban Hymns – by a margin of greater than two to one last week. A year ago, the Spice Girls' first album Spice experienced only a 21% slide on its second week, falling from 155,000 to 122,000 – but sales overall are more sluggish than they were then, with Christmas apparently arriving a little late at retail this year. Last week, for example, the number 20 album, Michael Bolton's All That Matters, sold only 10,300 units, while the comparative week last year saw the number 20 – Kula Shaker's K – selling 17,600, some 71% more. The gap decreases lower down the chart but even at number 50, the figures for last year are 42% higher – and this despite the fact that this year's releases are, by and large, stronger than those of 1996.
